The School of Art is proud to join the Regina Gouger Miller Gallery in presenting 384 Units, the first senior exhibit in this venue. As spacious galleries now house the culminating works of the next generation of young artists, artists who have been trained to expect and embrace infinite options. Though the exhibit's title refers to the number of academic units needed to graduate, the work here goes far beyond fulfilling assignments. It is evidence of this class' independent and inquisitive spirit, technical mastery and experimentation, conceptual struggles and resolutions, social engagement and professional aspirations. The diversity of media and expression reflect the directions currently being taught in the School of Art: Electronic and Time-Based Work; Sculpture, Installation, and Site Work; and Painting, Drawing and Printmaking. Part of the School's mission is to nourish multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary practices of art and to connect intentionally to society. We are confident in this talented group of artists' ability to negotiate their way in the world with creativity and intelligence and hope you will join us in celebrating the achievement of the Class of 2002 and this opportunity to connect with the School of Art.
